Abstract: In this chapter, we argue that in order to get to the roots of the problem and to build a sustainable financial system, legal and economic scholars should follow a new approach and analyse similar phenomena also through the lenses of other social sciences. Given that regulation per se cannot be expected to promote good corporate culture, we argue that the role of corporate governance should be enhanced so as to reinforce sustainable conduct within financial institutions. In addition, we suggest that supervisory authorities and institutional investors should make pressure on boards incentivizing them to design and implement a sustainable and ethical culture within financial institutions.

2. SIRI, M. and ZHU, S., ‘EU Investor’, in A. BARTOLINI et al. (eds.), Dictionary of Statutes within EU Law, Springer, 2019, 209-217.

Abstract: This paper aims to define the current investor protection regime under European Union rules. The reforming process that involved the entire financial regulatory framework in the last decade clearly signed a shift towards a more ‘paternalistic’ approach, intended to prevent further episodes of financial misbehaviour. The article analyses the main regulatory innovations concerning (1) the disclosure of product information, (2) conduct of business (COB) rules, (3) product governance and intervention and (4) financial education.

3. ZHU, S. AND SIRI, M., ‘Will the EU Commission successfully integrate sustainability risks and factors in the investor protection regime: A Research Agenda’, Sustainability 11, Special Issue: Corporate Sustainability Reforms, 2019.

Abstract: this paper starts by briefly analyzing the recent developments of the regulation of sustainable finance at the global level, then offers a more detailed view on the establishment of a common regime on sustainable finance in the EU, with particular reference to the action plan ‘Financing Sustainable Growth'. Then, it examines the recent proposals for regulation on sustainable finance, specifically considering the barriers to the integration of sustainability risks and factors in the EU investor protection regulation with particular reference to investment services with respect to its four main dimensions: (1) disclosure of product information, (2) conduct of business (COB) rules, (3) product governance and intervention, and (4) financial education. The paper concludes that the EU reforming proposals, though admirable, risk oversimplifying a complex issue that cannot be easily solved without considering its practical implications on each category of financial operators in the performance of different financial services.

Abstract: This paper analyses the recent developments of the regulation of sustainable finance, starting from the global level, then considering the establishment of a common regime on sustainable finance in the EU. Subsequently, the article focuses on the barriers to the integration of sustainability risks and factors in the EU investor protection regulation, with respect to its main dimensions: disclosure of product information; conduct of business rules; product governance and intervention and financial education.
